MISSISSIPPI COLLEGE is the oldest institution of higher learning in Mississippi, chartered by the Legislature in 1826. The School of Law began as the Jackson School of Law in 1930, joining Mississippi College in 1975. The Law Review started shortly after that, publishing its first issue in 1978.

Since then, the Law Review has become invaluable to the judiciary, practitioners, professors, and law students. It has been cited in numerous reported cases and has informed debates about state legal and public policy changes.

ONLINE PUBLICATIONS: Before 2023, individuals could subscribe to the annual Mississippi College Law Review publication. Volume 41's Editorial Board tackled the long-awaited goal of moving from subscriptions to an exclusively online forum. Today, the Mississippi College Law Review provides free and convenient access to published articles through its online Digital Commons database. While the Law Review still offers hard-copy prints to the authors of each issue, the Digital Commons provides open access to these scholarly works around the clock. To access the Mississippi College Law Review's Digital Commons, please see <https://dc.law.mc.edu/lawreview/>.

UNSOLICITED MANUSCRIPTS: The Mississippi College Law Review welcomes submissions. Submissions should conform to the latest edition of THE BLUEBOOK: A UNIFORM SYSTEM OF CITATION. Please note that the Law Review does not publish the works of students currently enrolled in other law schools. For more information about submissions, visit <https://law.mc.edu/students/student-organizations/mc-law-review>.

DISCLAIMER: The views expressed in the Mississippi College Law Review are solely those of the authors and not the Law Review or its editors.
